It reveres the elegance of transience, finding expression in Japanese gardens, traditional architecture, and the nuances of changing seasons.

These concepts celebrate the unseen beauty, offering a meditative and profound spirituality, gracefully sharing the beauty of momentary joys and sorrows.

The sense of MATCHA and WABI-SABI

Japan's MATCHA culture pursues fleeting beauty and tranquility through the refined rituals of the tea ceremony.

MATCHA transcends being a mere beverage, evoking a sense of inner calm intertwined with the beauty of nature.

WABI-SABI, an appreciation for simple beauty and impermanence, is a philosophical underpinning.

This is a proposal for a new office space divided into a tearoom space and a meeting space. We created a full-fledged tearoom space that is hard to believe it is on a single floor in a high-rise building. The Corona Disaster is changing the mindset of office workers, and we positioned this space as a place to expand business globally with the spirit of Zen.

The top floor of the building, which is a 3-minute walk from the station in Tokyo and has good access, has been completely renovated into a traditional Japanese house with Japanese tea room (Chashitsu).

Natural squeezed logs are used for the floor pillars of the eight tatami mat hall, and 2500-year-old cedar is used for the base and top plates of the side floors. In addition, avoiding the beams of the structure and using nets and decorative rafters to create a descending ceiling. The roof balcony has an open field that is lightweight and has measures against wind.

A tea room space where you can forget the hustle and bustle of the city in Ginza, Tokyo. It is a tea room with a gallery where the space can be changed in various ways by opening and closing the fittings.

The tea room "Guan" at the Ginza "Ippodo Gallery" has been completed.

A tea ceremony space where precious fittings from 100 years ago have come back to life. It is an infinitely simple tea room with main fittings.
